ASSEMBLY BILL 339

PUBLIC PARTICIPATION

SUMMARY

This bill would allow for continued remote participation in local hearings/meetings and expand language access, allowing for more people to participate in government meetings and decisions.

BACKGROUND

Laws governing public participation for local agencies all require certain processes for members of the public to participate at open meetings. However, participation is often limited to those who are able to travel to meetings to speak in-person, and to those who speak and read English. These requirements, along with inconsistent language access standards, often preclude immigrants and low-income people from participating.

While COVID-19 precautions have increased usage of remote participation options, not all agencies allow for effective remote participation. Additionally, there is frequently confusion over how to access meetings through remote technology options. The lack of timely notification and clear instructions reinforces obstacles.

THE PROBLEM

COVID-19 has exacerbated existing barriers that prevent people from participating in one of our democracy's greatest features - public discourse designed to inform the rules and policies that govern us. In addition, linguistic, physical, and geographic isolation prevents constituents from exercising their civic duties, which limits our governing bodies from achieving their full potential.

SOLUTION

AB 339 would protect the public's access to government, both during and following the COVID-19 pandemic.

This bill would ensure that:

- Local agencies provide both call-in and internet service-based options for all public meetings so constituents can participate either remotely or in-person.
- Language access services are provided for immigrant communities upon request.
- Meeting agendas and instructions for accessing meetings remotely are posted in a timely and accessible manner.
