WASTED POTENTIAL

2019, using the lowest pre-2018 performance rent, the City's general fund would have seen at least another $5.7 million.

Lost concerts also add up to lost sales tax revenue. State reports on taxable sales show a $75 million increase in taxable food and beverage sales in Santa Clara after the stadium opened (and before the NFL season) in the third quarter of 2014: $564 million compared to third quarter 2013's $489 million.

In addition, the City's general fund has also lost ticket and parking fees.

The City Council insists that the curfew is necessary.

"I have children," Mayor Lisa Gillmor said in August 2017. "I know what it's like to try to get them to bed at night. We have problems with transportation. We have parking issues. We have a stack of complaints after every concert."

When the City did a survey in 2018 about stadium issues, less than 40 percent of both citywide residents and near-neighbors said they were concerned about how late weeknight events go or about noise from night-time events. (The survey revealed that residents' single largest complaint wasn't noise but public urination in the vicinity of the stadium.)

City Hall refuses to accept responsibility for the revenue loss, continuing to insist that it's the 49ers management that caused the collapse of event revenue, even though the same 49ers management delivered $10.5 million to the general fund in the years before the curfew.

Mayor Lisa Gillmor and her allies also like to point to events like booking local high school football games at the stadium as the causes for the revenue decline because they lose money. But those events were booked at Levi's Stadium during the years that Santa Clara's general fund was receiving millions from non-NFL events.
